GETTYSBURG BATTLE NEWS

HOW IT REACHED HARRISBURG AND OTHER POINTS

The Story of Messages Sent on the Confederate Advance on Gettysburg.

Col. Alex. McClure tells the following interesting story of how messages were sent from Chambersburg of the Confederate advance and of the first news of the battle received at Harrisburg and in the Cumberland Valley.

When the concentration toward Gettysburg began scouts were sent out generally with information written out by Judge Kimmell on tissue paper either sewed in their garments or carried in a pocket where they could be promptly fingered into a little ball and swallowed in case of capture.

The movement of the infantry toward Gettysburg was sent out at once but was not regarded as decisive of Lee crossing the mountain to Gettysburg until on the night of the 29th, when the wagon train of the army was hurried through Chambersburg on the way to Gettysburg. It was then accepted as conclusive that the battle center of the campaign was to be transferred from the Cumberland Valley to the line between the South Mountain and the Potomac, and it was considered of the utmost importance to have the information sent speedily to Harrisburg, as the only way to reach the Union commander. Among the young men who happened to be in the town was Stephen W. Pomeroy, of Roxbury, whose father had been an Associate Judge with Kimmell on the bench, and Kimmell knew that he would be one of the safest who could be trusted with such a mission. Kimmell prepared a dispatch without date or signature, briefly telling of Lee's movements, and the certainty of his concentration on the Potomac line. The dispatch was carefully sewed inside the lining of the buckle strap of Pomeroy's pants, and he was hurried off on his important mission. He went on foot to his father's home in Roxbury, where he managed to find a horse, and hurried across the mountain spurs into Path Valley and to Concord at the head of the valley where the mountain gap opens into Tuscarora Valley. He secured a fresh horse there, and rode rapidly down the Tuscarora Valley, exchanging horses again with an acquaintance near Bealstown, and he reached Port Royal on the Pennsylvania Railroad between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, after having walked nearly twenty miles at a rapid gait and ridden over forty miles. He waked up the telegraph operator and delivered his despatch, but he was in such an exhausted condition that he did not think of the necessity of signing it, or indicating in some way from whom it came.

I was one of a most anxious party in the Governor's room at Harrisburg waiting for some information of the movements of Lee's army, and not knowing at what hour Lee would swoop upon Harrisburg and hoist the Confederate flag over the Capitol. For three days we had no information, excepting that furnished by scouts, and while it was at times important, all of the reports received up to that time gave no information as to Lee's purpose to deliver battle in the Cumberland Valley or south of the South Mountain. There had been no sleep, except broken naps forced by exhaustion and not one of the Governor's circle had been in bed for three nights. The whole State was simply paralyzed by the appalling situation, and one of the aggravating features of the situation was that no information could be obtained of Lee's movements or purposes. Colonel Scott was present, but rarely left the little room in which was the telegraph battery. About 3 o'clock in the morning of the 1st of July, Scott brought into the Executive chamber an unsigned dispatch dated Port Royal, telling that Lee's entire army was marching toward Gettysburg, and that the wagons rapidly followed, to which the operator had added that the messenger had left Chambersburg the day before and reached Port Royal through Path and Tuscarora Valleys, but no information was given as to his identity.

The operator at Port Royal closed his office immediately upon sending the despatch, and all efforts to get him for further explanation failed. General Couch, who was present, finding that in no way could the account be verified by reaching the messenger, at once crossed the river and advanced a strong picket force toward Carlisle, and early in the forenoon he discovered that Rhodes had withdrawn from Carlisle, and moved directly toward Gettysburg, and he at once advanced his force up the valley that was then entirely free from the enemy and re-established telegraph and railroad communication. As soon as the unsigned dispatch was received, it was repeated to Washington, and General Meade received it probably within less than an hour after it reached Harrisburg. It was the information given by this dispatch that prompted General Meade to order Reynolds to make a reconnaissance in force to Gettysburg, resulting in the first day's disastrous battle to the Union army, and the death of Reynolds.

Events of overwhelming moment unfolded so rapidly upon the worn-out men at Harrisburg that the question of the nature of the dispatch given the day before, concerning the advance, and it was not until weeks passed that the General Couch, one of the three about whom at the time discovered with the messenger was "The Presbyterian" and was operating in Baltimore, and through Curtin was circulating a story of a "reconnaissance" of the Potomac, and the General Meade's "reconnaissance" of the Potomac, and the information received about Lee's movement to Gettysburg, and that he and never from any other source.

as when brought the message. One of the messengers, Rev. Stephen W. Pomeroy, a member of the school, then told him for the first time that he was the scout who had carried the message. While at Carlisle he had a detailed account of his journey.

News from the battlefield was awaited with the widest interest, but none came until the morning of the second day when the information of the death of Reynolds and the overwhelming defeat of the two corps engaged with the capture of some 4000 prisoners, reached the North through Baltimore, and the first authentic account of the battle was brought by Major Rosen-garten and Captain Riddle, of Reynolds's staff, who brought the body of their fallen chieftain to sleep with his kindred. During all the second of July many bloody conflicts occurred on the Gettysburg field, and there was fearful apprehension as to the final issue of the conflict. General Meade had communication with Washington so that any important event could be ascertained. The most hopeful view that could be taken of the reports of the second day's conflict was that it was without special advantage to either side, and all of the night of the second, and the morning and day of the third passed with the most painful uncertainty prevailing at Harrisburg. Wayne MacVeagh was among the men who gave anxious days and sleepless nights to the occasion, and he spent most of his time close to the tick of the telegraph. About 5 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon he rushed into the Governor's chamber, and with a wildly tremulous voice read out Meade's dispatch announcing the repulse of Pickett's charge. All knew that such a charge was the last desperate effort of Lee to win at Gettysburg, and that his defeat was almost absolutely assured. It was the first moment of relief or anything approaching repose the worn-out men at the Capital had been able to welcome for fully a week. Some immediately sought their beds for rest, while within half an hour there were many sleepers in the chairs and on the sofas of the Capitol rooms. Curtin, because of his feeble condition, was forced home to take his bed and remain there several days with the assurance that he would be notified of any new peril that arose.

The following morning, the national day of the Republic, the sun arose to spread its radiance over a cloudless sky, and the first news received from the battlefield was that Lee's trains were retreating toward the Potomac, and later came the message from Harrisburg telling of the surrender of Vicksburg. The people of Pennsylvania not only felt that they had been rescued from invasion and the destruction of war upon their own soil, but they knew that the military power of the Confederacy was broken, and the dark cloud of uncertainty verging on despair that hung over the great State for nearly a fortnight, speedily gave way to the strengthened conviction and delightful hope that the Union could be restored by the valor of our arms.

The sudden change made by the report of Lee's defeat and the capture of Vicksburg was visible on every face, old and young. The terrible strain was ended, the invasion was repulsed, and the many thousands of people in the Cumberland Valley, scattered all through the interior and eastern part of the State with their stock and other valuables, began a general movement homeward. Many of the farmers had left their golden wheat fields ready for the reaper, but fortunately the Confederates expected to occupy the valley and harvest it, and no destruction of the grain fields was permitted. Most of the crops were thus saved, and in a few weeks industrial operations in the shops and valleys were very generally resumed. General Couch moved his forces forward through the Cumberland Valley and rapidly repaired the railway and telegraph lines and by the 10th of July he established his headquarters at Chambersburg. A large portion of Milroy's command had scattered off through the mountains in squads of half a dozen or more and in the general demoralization foraged upon the country recklessly and often destructively. It required nearly two weeks to get them reunited. They were scattered along Juniata Valley and in the mountains as far west as ACKNOWLEDGE IT. Gettysburg Has to Bow to the Inevitable—Scores of Citizens Prove It.

After reading the public statement of this representative citizen of Gettysburg given below, you must come to this conclusion: A remedy which cured years ago, which has kept the kidneys in good health since, can be relied upon to perform the same work in other cases. Read this:

Mrs. M. Ohler, 116 W. Middle St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "I was troubled by weak and disordered kidneys for over a year. My back ached constantly and pains extended from my loins into my head. I had chills and dizzy spells and was bothered by irregular passages of the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills were so highly recommended that I finally procured a box at the People's Drug Store and commenced their use. A few doses brought relief and after continuing the use of this remedy for a short time, all symptoms of my trouble had disappeared. Doan's Kidney Pills deserve my endorsement." Statement given November 1, 1907.

A WILLING CO-OPERATOR. On January 3, 1910, when Mrs. Ohler was interviewed, she said: "I heartily recommend Doan's Kidney Pills again and confirm all I have previously said about them. This remedy should have a permanent place in every household."

A FRIEND OF JIMMIE'S

By ELEANOR MERCEIN KELLY

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

People don't realize it, but some of the proudest, best-mannered dogs they see on the streets are only pretending to belong, as I used to. It doesn't harm anybody, and it cheers you up when you are lonesome and hungry. Besides, there's always a chance of being adopted. In my puppy days, I often followed ladies along the street all day long, wagging and capering politely, though my ribs and the lack of a collar must have made it plain to all the world that I was nobody's pet. Later, after I came to live at the foot of the pasture-lot, I learned to keep up appearances more cleverly. When acquaintances passed at a safe distance, I would rush fiercely out of the weeds, barking very hoarsely and strutting up and down with rigid legs. It generally fooled them. They would shy away respectfully, envying me the fine lawn and pasture, and the great house I guarded.

But one day a big hound came by who was not fooled. When I roared my warning at him and began to strut instead of sking away, he wheeled about and made for me. I could not escape through the pasture-lot behind because there was my enemy, the colt. I could not retire upon the house, because there was my enemy, the cook. There was no retreat open except the road, and at the turn of that I ran straight into my worst enemies of all, the boys.

"Hi! Head off the cur! Dog-fight! Dog-fight!" they yelled, and would not let me pass.

So I faced about desperately, my hackles on end, and tried to growl. It was only a whine that came, and the hound choked that half-way out. I gave right up, because I thought perhaps he would not care to fight all by himself. But he kept on chewing at me just the same, until it seemed easier just to close my eyes and die than to make another effort to squirm away from those tearing teeth. All the while, I heard faintly what the boys were crying—"Sickum! Get a grip there! Stand up to him, cur!"—and I tried to wag my tail to show that I'd like to be friends.

At last a new one came running up, a thin little puppy of a boy, crying, "Say, that's a shame, fellows! That's cruel!"

"Yah, yah, sissy," jeered the others. "Keep out of it then, girly! The hound's fightin' fine."

"He ain't fightin'—he's just eatin'! I'm goin' to stop this!" cried the puppy boy, his voice breaking like mine does when I bark big and feel scared. "You lay a hand on that hound, Jimmie Smith, and I'll lick the stuffin' out of you!" screamed the biggest boy of all.

But the hound, snarling, was already being pulled off of me; and a rush of hot blood came into my eyes, and I forgot everything.

When I woke up the hound was gone, and so were the boys—all but the puppy one. We were lying side by side on the grass, both of us whimpering a little. I saw it was the boy who lived in the house I had been pretending to take care of, and I tried to sneak away, for the people in that house don't like dogs. But he put his hand on my neck.

"Don't you run off and leave me, too, pup," he said, with a little grin. Then he broke out blubbering. "I ain't cryin' because I got licked. I'm crying because I'm so mad! Those mean old bullies! Just you wait till I grow up—darn 'em! Darn 'em!"

Things went pretty hard with me for awhile. I did not dare leave the cover of the weeds to look for food, because none of my legs moved very easily, and the left hind one dragged. If I went into the road, boys or the dogs who belonged were likely to chase me, and I couldn't have got away. If I tried the pasture, there was my enemy the colt, always on the lookout; and I still dream sometimes, after a heavy dinner, that his wicked iron feet are trampling me as I saw them trample—but that comes later. So I stayed in the weeds, and got thinner than ever, and shivered all the time. Fortunately a rain came up and made a puddle beside me, or I should have died of thirst.

Then at last I heard Jimmie's step passing on the road, and I wagged my tail so hard that it must have stirred the weeds, for he came in and found me.

"Why, hello, old sport!" he cried. "I've been lookin' for you everywhere. How hot your nose is, and how your ribs stick out!"

He felt me all over, and I had to wince often, though his fingers were as gentle as my mother's tongue.

"Pretty bad, ain't it?" he said. "Say, you're going home with me, pup. When old Sue sees how bad you're hurt, p'raps she'll grease you with somethin'. Women are awful kind when a feller's sick."

I knew better, but it is hard to make boys understand things. The Cook was at the kitchen door when we got there, bigger and fiercer than ever, with a broom handy, as usual.

"What's that you totin', boy?" she demanded, suspiciously.

Jimmie hung his head. "Just a poor little sick puppy for you to nurse, Suey. You're such a fine nurse."

"Puppy! Humph!" she sniffed. "Dat ole sneak-thief yaller nigger dawg—reckon I don't know him? Ole as my gran'paw, he is! Ah—"

Taft's FAILURE IN MATTER OF LEADERSHIP POINTED OUT.

Unsettled School Problems—Making

in Panama.

Tait a Leader Without an Answer
for His Times.

In an article in the July "American Magazine" Ray Stannard Baker says of Mr. Taft:

"Lincoln laid down the law, and uttered the clarion note of leadership in words that cut like a sword through the confused but none the less passionate popular emotion on the slavery question, when he said: 'This nation, cannot exist half slave and half free,' and when he said to the Southern disunionists, 'We won't go out of the Union, and you shan't.'"

"But we have heard nothing clear, nothing sure, nothing strong, from Mr. Taft and the country drifting, drifting, toward a crisis."

"When at his famous speech at Cooper Union in February, 1908, a man in the audience put to him the most poignant question of this age, 'What is a man going to do who is out of work and starving?' Mr. Taft replied: 'God knows, I don't.'"

"And this is Mr. Taft: a leader without an answer for his times. 'God knows,' or Roosevelt knows, or the Supreme Court knows—I don't."

"What is needed is a leadership not amiable but clear, not compromising but courageous. A leadership with convictions, not mere views on popular problems, one swayed by the people not by personal friends, a leadership at once patient, strong, brave, clear, democratic—like Lincoln's. For such a leadership Mr. Taft has shown his utter unfitness."

Unsolved School Problems

In an article in THE WORLD TO-DAY for July, entitled "The Lagging Half," by Eleanor Atkinson, the following statement is made:

"Classroom instructions rather than the child and the direction of his daily life still engrosses our attention. We still crowd our children into uniform, nonadjustable desks; we fail to detect disease in its incipency; ignore the retarding effects of abnormal physical conditions; we fail as yet to adapt our requirements to the period of adolescence; continue to classify children according to physiological age; we have thus far made little investigation into fatigue, it causes, symptoms and alleviations; we are making only a beginning at a study of the problem of defective children, and only within the last year or so have we known what is meant by an adenoid face. We have just begun to discover the corrective effects of play on fatigue, malposture, defective breathing, poor circulation and similar evils; we deny our children out-door recesses and offer no organized play and group games in the open air; the school life of the child has been lengthened, our population is congregated in cities, contagion and infection are more difficult to control, attendance is seriously interrupted by children's ailments, and yet we make our brief concern the course of study, examinations, tests, promotions, and graduations."

The Making of a Garden

A garden is a work of art no less than a statue, a painting, or a poem. Love and wisdom, equally with heat and light, must unite to produce it, and to its perfecting must go that "infinite capacity for taking pains" that is the large part of genius.

The spirit of a people expresses itself in its gardens as it does in architecture or its literature. Japan, Persia, Italy and England are each identified with particular forms, the one no lovelier than the other, but each with its peculiar excellence, its laws of freedom and restraint. America has not yet evolved a distinct form of its own, but has been content to borrow from its predecessors, and to mingle such styles as suited the moment's whim. California, to be sure, with the lavish assistance of a climate that in a year works miracles for which the old world was willing to wait a century, has performed additional marvels of lush flowering that needs nothing but its bloom to make it adorable, and can probably not be matched anywhere on earth. But where its gardens are gardens, they are Spanish in form.—From Hildegarde Hawthorne's "A Garden of the Imagination" in July Century.

Courting Trouble in Panama

If the English language ever means what it says—and this age of technical construction justifies uncertainty—the United States agreed in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty not to fortify the Panama Canal. But we are blithely fortifying it, spending a big bunch of our deficit in the efforts to make the Tall Oats.

We notice a great deal of boasting of tall oats, but can this be beaten? Squire Hammers passed through a field of oats on his mother's farm July 4, pulled up a stock of oats every 25 steps at the side of the field he had 3 stalks in his hand, each stalk measuring 63 inches and averaged 100 grains of oats. We say to the moneyed men of Adams if a farm will produce such stalks without lime and manure, it would improve produce oats eight feet high. And the widow has offered this farm for the last three years at $35 per acre, soil better than hundreds of gardens. Come and see the place. Will sell at once.

THAT OPEN LETTER

Ex-Postmaster Wm. B. McIlhenny printed in the "Star and Sentinel" last week an open letter, which he didn't write himself, because—because he couldn't. There is but one conclusion to be drawn from fact that he employed two Democratic attorneys to write it, and that is he couldn't find a Republican to dady it. The statement rambles through a column and a half, printing immaterial letters, throwing dust so this community might be fooled in not seeing the contemptibleness of his act in reporting a home Democratic paper. He admits he reported the COMPILER on May 7, 1908, but is careful not to print the communication of that date and for the reason that his letter of May 7 would show up the truth in the matter and destroy the false impression he would like to leave by his open letter. As long as he withholds this letter of May 7, his open letter is beneath our notice, for thereby he adds deception to his other dirty work.

The P. O. Dept. stated the COMPILER had been reported. Wm. B. McIlhenny admits he did the reporting May 7, 1908. In March of the same year the COMPILER had a letter saying that the Third Assistant Postmaster had advised that "It was not the intention of the Dept. to harass legitimate publishers or in any way embarrass them," and that the COMPILER would "in no wise be embarrassed by the order." The attention of Wm. B. McIlhenny was drawn to this communication which he admits, yet five weeks later he writes the letter of May 7, doing the Democratic paper and taking care of the Republican paper. The letter of May 7th, Please?

GLASS HOUSES.

There seems to be newspapers always ready to throw stones at another publisher, or lend their columns for that purpose, forgetful of that old adage about people living in glass houses. Last week the "Star and Sentinel" loaned or sold its columns to an open letter of Wm. B. McIlhenny. It was likely expecting too much that they would investigate into the falseness or truth of any such statement before using.

The COMPILER has been compelled by order of the Post Office Department to answer under oath the question "Of the number of copies mailed as to subscribers, how many were sent to persons whose subscriptions at the time of mailing issue, had expired for more than twelve months." Until the "Star and Sentinel" makes the same oath, isn't it living in a glass house?

WHAT IS HE TRYING TO SAY.

Why even Bill B. couldn't get Davy to print his open letter. Perhaps he didn't offer enough. Its funny no one seems anxious to stand for the down and out Bill B. Instead of extending a helping hand to this ex. or throwing stones, Davy assumes the advisory air and with an eye on Number One says, "The Independent" commenced four years ago to weed its subscription list and thus complied with the P. O. demands." As the order of the P. O. declaring that subscriptions to weeklies more than one year in arrears shall not be counted in the legitimate list of subscribers was only promulgated about Jan. 1, 1908, two and a half years ago, it would be interesting to know what Davy was trying to comply with four years ago.

Plans Another Play.

Mr. Jay Wellington, who with help of Gettysburg players, produced "The Toastmaster" and two months ago "The Open Gate" and "Surprises," is in town making plans for putting on stage at an early date with local talent "A New York Roof Garden by Night."

Swimming Feat.

Robert Maus, of Hanover, last week swam from big bridge above Dick's wood to the breast of the dam at Waldheim, a distance of one mile and back to bridge in one hour and fifteen minutes, and took only a minutes rest. He has been attending the American Medical Missionary College at Battle Creek, Mich. This is said to surpass any swimming feat attempted in Adams county waters.

The Services in Great Conewago Presbyterian church will be conducted next Sabbath by the pastor himself at 10.30 and 7.30.

Weak Throat—Weak Lungs

Cold after cold; cough after cough! Troubled with this taking-cold habit? Better break it up. We have great confidence in Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for this work. No medicine like it for weak throats and weak lungs. Ask your doctor for his opinion. He knows all about it. His approval is valuable. Follow his advice at all times. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

YORK SPRINGS HAS SAFE AND SANE CELEBRATIONS

Tree Fell on Passing Conveyance—
A Frog swallows Water Snake—
Pen Mar visited by Locusts

York Springs presented to the county an exhibition of a safe and sane celebration of the Fourth of July, only it happened to be two days before the National Birthday. There were two parades and two base ball games. The first parade of Dillsburg and Bendersville bands with horseman and the baseball team came off in the afternoon. A game of ball followed. In the evening there was a fantastic parade of the base ball team with the bands and darkness called the game that closed the day.

Miss May Gardner of York Springs with her nephew, John Gardner, was driving a short distance east of the junction of East Berlin road and the turnpike near York Springs, trees were being cut down for the Elecker's Saw Mill, and as the Gardner conveyance came driving by, a large tree crashed down across the road, crushing the buggy. Miss Gardner and her companion were quickly rescued from beneath the wreckage. Miss Gardner had a couple of bones broken in her hand and received bruises on the head and face. The nephew was shielded by Miss Gardner and escaped unhurt.

George Elmhart, of New Oxford, captured a monster frog in Conewago Creek last week. On killing the frog a water snake two feet long was found in its stomach.

Pen-Mar has been visited by millions of locusts. There are said to be more locusts than have been seen for years. They are doing great damage to shrubbery and chestnut trees. At times the noise of singing is distracting.

A bullet fired from a revolver of some unknown person in East Berlin struck pavement at Seiff's bakery and glancing struck a boy nearby in the thigh and did such injury that a physician was necessary.

Mark Hildebrand of East Berlin, while engaged at sawing a hand board, had his saw jump and severed cut his left arm at wrist and it required several stitches to close the wound.

ABBOTTSTOWN.

Emory Wolf and family, of Batavia, N. Y., are visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Wolf, of Abbottstown. John Wolf is getting a new threshing machine, everybody give him a call.

Theodore Miller and wife, of York, are visiting relatives in town.

Most farmers are done cutting grain and many of them are busy housing it.

The Abbottstown Lutheran S. S. will hold their annual outing in Mrs. Hafer's grove August 20. The Penn Grove band will furnish the music. Everybody come.

Misses Naomi and Ruth Wolf, of York, were town visitors over Sunday. Chas. Gable and wife, of York, visited his brother Geo. Gable.

Wonder Who

Gaps in Chicks

We notice in a late issue of your paper where Prof. H. A. Surface says to a Clarion county farmer that gaps come from the little chicks eating earth worms. We have heard this saying ever since we were a boy. This spring we went into the poultry business just as fast as the hens hatched the young, we placed them in the yard to dig for themselves, every other day we would dig as many as one pint of earth worms, and we enjoyed the great sport in seeing the little chicks battling for the worms. We have now nearly grown about 200 assorted breeds of chickens, and we know nothing of the gaps, our feed was worms, dampened corn meal, broken rice and the little red pods of clover blossoms, we would pick the heads to pieces and the little chicks seemed to thrive on the little red stems, they contained honey.

Storekeepers Must Not Keep Flies.

Storekeepers who sell foodstuffs have been warned by the State Dairy and Food Commissioner that all table foods exposed for sale must be protected from contamination by flies.

Commissioner Foust in speaking about the crusade against the fly, says:

"I have been making a study of the fly, and have had the advice of many medical men and storekeepers and they agree the best way to observe the provision of the Murphy law so that food will not be stored or kept in a way to render it liable to contamination is to cover it up from flies. Under the law the agents of this division can arrest without a sample when it is seen that food is improperly stored. The part the fly plays in spreading disease does not need to be discussed. This State is going to take a position in the matter and require food to be protected."

GEORGE THOMAS raised a barn on his Huntington township farm last week. Sixty five men helped to raise the timbers.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer the sum of one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. THE MAGAZINES FOR JULY canal a weakness rather than a strength. Probably John Bull will not object to our violating our treaty with him by fortifying it; but it would be more sensible to get up a pact of the powers to guarantee the canal's neutrality forever, in war and in peace alike. The best authorities say effective fortification is impossible, anyhow. Why assume the obligation to protect a far-distant outpost that can't be protected? Our geographical relations to it assure that we will get in war, the best service from the canal if it be kept neutral. To fortifying it will not prevent the enemy blockading it. The idea of Japan sending her fleet through the canal in war is silly. We are worse than wasting our money; are breaking our word, and are weakening ourselves in a military way, by fortifying the ditch. It should be made absolutely neutral, as is the Suez. British diplomacy did not thoughtlessly neutralize the key to its road to India. It did the right thing as we are doing the wrong thing. — From "Success Magazine" for July.

A Politician's Dream of a City.
"The union of voters is needed just now more than anything else in sight," said the politician.
"And this union of voters is bound to come. I believe that, to begin with, we're going to get Direct Primaries, and also the Initiative, Referendum, and Recall—mighty fine institutions, because they put big questions right up to the voter and so tend to make him think. But these ain't the only weapons. I've been a good deal of a boss myself in a humble way in the last ten years. I've been too close to politics to think we can do without a machine. And I want a new machine, one that is run from the bottom up. That sounds simple, but it ain't. It's the toughest political job this town has ever tackled. It'll take years of getting the crowd together in a dozen kinds of ways."
"A new political party, or an old one made over again, so built that whether its leaders want to or not, they've got to stand for the people, all of them all the time. A new political party—and organizations of all kinds to bring voters together, and then make 'em open their eyes, and make 'em keep on wanting more and more of the aforesaid swiftly cheapening riches of the earth."
"Along about fifty years ago, a certain agitator framed up the following little speech:
"Of the people, by the people, for the people."
"That'll do for a dream of a city for me."—July "Everybody's" Magazine.

The Trees for Your Country Home.
Plant English trees for late autumn. The English oak, the Scotch elm, the English beech, and the European linden all come to us with established habits that they do not easily yield. They hold their leaves in autumn for two or three weeks longer than American trees of the same sort. King Charles's oak and the Scotch elm give us their russet leaves until well into the edge of winter—the oak sometimes all winter.
In Florida I find that the water oak and the persimmon and the black-jack oak are to be reckoned with for mid-winter foliage. The persimmon gives us a fine show of mixed scarlet and yellow, while the black-jack, a little later in December, is gorgeous with its motely hues. This sort of foliage is hardly disposed of before the sweet gum and the sugar maple put on their spring foliage and their crimson blossoms.—E. P. Powell in July "Outing."

Mr Roosevelt's Adventure with the Sleepy Giraffe.
When I was within forty yards, in plain sight, away from cover, she opened her eyes and looked drowsily at me; but I stood motionless and she dozed off again. This time I walked up to within ten feet of her. Nearer I did not care to venture, as giraffe strike and kick very hard with their hooves, and, moreover, occasionally strike with the head, the blow seemingly not being delivered with the knobby, skin-covered horns, but with the front teeth of the lower jaw. She waked, looked at me, and then, rearing slightly, struck at me with her left fore leg, the blow, of course, falling short. I laughed and leaped back, and the other men ran up shouting. But the giraffe would not run away. She stood within twenty feet of us, looking at us peevishly, and occasionally moving her lips as if she were making a face. We kept close to the tree, so as to dodge round it, under the branches, if she came at us: for we would have been most reluctant to shoot her. I threw a stick at her, hitting her in the side, but she paid no attention; and when Bakhari came behind her with a stick she turned sharply on him and he made a prompt retreat. We were laughing and talking all the time. Then we pelted her with sticks and clods of earth, and, after having thus stood within twenty feet of us for three or four minutes, she cantered slowly off for fifty yards, and then walked away with leisurely unconcern. She was apparently in the best of health and in perfect condition. She did not get our wind, but her utter indifference to the close presence of four men is inexplicable. From "African Game Trails," by Theodore Roosevelt, in the July "Scribner."

Domestic Partnership
"For fifteen years I have kept an account of all expenditures and income. My expense book has three columns, the first for benevolence—for my husband and myself agreed in the joy of setting aside one-tenth for giving—the second for board and living expenses, the third for clothing, carfare and all miscellaneous objects. I know each month exactly what comes in and what goes out. Every member of the family reports their spending to me, except for personal accounts the children keep, which are lumped for my book. At the end of the year the books are balanced, and we make our estimates for the year to come, roughly calculating our probable income, benevolence, etc., and appointing the latter. Seeing thus our plans and economies, the children rarely ask for things we cannot afford."—July Good House-keeping.

An Iris Garden
The July House Beautiful, teeming with interesting articles on houses and surroundings, presents the subject of the Iris Garden, by Elizabeth Bootes Clark who says: "In this day of specialties people have rose gardens, alpine gardens, rock and water gardens—why not an iris garden. There is no more beautiful flower that grows than the iris, and the old fashioned blue flag is associated in many of the oldest and most beautiful gardens. It is variously known in different localities as the flag, the fleur-de-lis, the rainbow flower, and the poor-man's-Orchid. If the proper species and their varieties are carefully selected there can be a succession of bloom from March through July. When it is wished to have some bloom after that various late-blooming lilies or perennials can be planted in clumps here and there."

California the Ideal.
July "Sunset" presents the story of other climes in a number of articles and Katharine Chandler enthralls one in her article of "California's Today-Turvy Calendar" saying: "From the beginning of her story, California has been trying to materialize the Ideal. It is true her ideal has changed with passing decades, but ever, consciously or unconsciously, she has adapted, invented, striven with a glowing imagination that has befooled the world. During the Spanish era, when all civilization was a warring tumult, she was a haven of rest and wholesome fraternity. Her days of gold picture an adventurous romance that jostled the world into a frenzy of new ideas and new desires. Her grain period created new machinery and revolutionized labor conditions in both rural and commercial circles. Her subdivision of the Spanish grants and consequent fruit development, started emigration in all quarters of the earth, emigration of families that visionized ideal homes in the land of sunshine and flowers. None of her industries has been content to follow traditional lines. They have all advanced boldly into undreamed figures, demanding unforeseen inventions and new routes of commerce to hurry them into a world market."

False Hair of Fashion Comes from the Chinese Dead.
A new and unfamiliar trade, which springs from the great and increasing demand by women for false hair, has invaded the tenements of the Jewish East side, New York, in the last two years. This is the manufacture of human hair out of course black Chinese hair imported from the East.

The hair, according to one of the United States consular reports from Hong-Kong, is brought to Hong-Kong from the interior. It is either sold through Hong-Kong export houses to New York dealers, or bought by purchasing agents from New York. These large firms in New York sell the Chinese hair at two dollars a pound to small tenement manufacturers—who, in turn, after its transformation into soft yellow or brown switches, resell to the large firms for six or eight dollars a pound. This hair is then distributed to the retail trade—hairdressers, department stores, etc. An ordinary switch weighing three ounces sells for from seven to twelve dollars at retail. Elizabeth Shepley Sergeant in the July "McClure's."

The Baby's Second Summer
"During the first year when the sterile milk of the mother is the exclusive food of the child, there is little danger of the infectious diarrhea that find its ready victims during the second summer," says Doctor Jean Williams in the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION for July.

"There are many reasons for this greater susceptibility. For one thing, weaning has just been accomplished, and the baby's system must become adjusted to the more severe strain imposed by artificial food; then too, the protective forces have not been in such great demand while the source of supply has been above suspicion.
"The mother in preparing to carry her baby safely over this crisis, must beware of irregular feeding, over feeding and improper or spoiled food. The digestive functions must be kept at their highest level of efficiency. Food must be kept or made as nearly as may be germ free. Undoubtedly all bacteria are not vicious, some are even benign, but there must be during the summer months, wholesale destruction in order that none of the especially pernicious ones, or their poisonous products, so often lurking in milk during hot weather, shall escape into the intestinal tract of the infant, there to set up an acute infectious diarrhea commonly known as cholera infantum."

Some Optical Effects Which Are Not Generally Understood—How to Look at Stars.
If one places a pin head up close to the eye and directly in front of it instead of seeing the pin right side up it will appear inverted. Also the head of the pin appears transparent and things may be seen as easily through it as through a sheet of isinglass, the head appearing simply as a large round cloud. If it is placed somewhat closer no pin or head can be seen at all.
If one gets into a very dark room and puts a lighted candle near the side of one eye very pretty and peculiar effects are observed. A tracery, forming a regular network, can be easily detected, and this is merely the shadow thrown by the candle on the retina of the eye of the small capillary blood vessels between the retina and the candle.
If one looks to the side of a dim star in the heavens the star appears a great deal brighter than direct vision makes it appear. This is because the light in the indirect vision falls on what is known as the "yellow spot" or point of keenest vision. As this is not put directly behind the front of the eye the side glance is necessary. Some people can see stars that way that they cannot perceive at all on direct vision.—Sunday Magazine of the Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Prince of Hotel Proprietors.
Way back somewhere in the sixties a young man traveled from his little sheep farm down in Texas, where the floods had cleaned out all his stock, to New York City. His name was Geo. C. Boldt, and the gyrations of Fortune's wheel that carried him from his first humble job of washing dishes and peeling onions in a restaurant kitchen to proprietor of some of the most princely hotels in the world make up one of the most fascinating stories in the July issue of "Human Life."
The star to which he had hitched his wagon was proprietorship of a hotel. Opportunity knocked and he gave her the glad hand. Then presto!—to his little hostelry one day, with flourish of trumpets, descended the great Wm. Waldorf Astor—and the hotel register full. But Boldt wasn't easily fazed, and the way in which he rose to the occasion, and the meal he served to the great William in his modest little dining-room convinced Astor that he had found the man he was looking for. The result was that the fortunes of the great Waldorf-Astoria were committed to his hands.

CASTE IN THE ARMY
One thing not commonly understood among civilians is the completeness of the barrier which divides army officers from soldiers—or as they are more generally called, the "men." It is always vastly amusing to those familiar with the service to observe the errors in this respect frequently made by the novelist and the playwright.

Personal qualifications have nothing whatever to do with the matter. A soldier may be a gentleman who has enlisted with the purpose of obtaining a commission; yet there can be between him and his officers no social intercourse of any sort, and severe penalties would be inflicted upon the officer who would attempt to disregard the rule.
It might seem that this enforcement of a caste sense would result in much hard feeling on the side of the men. Such however is not actually the case. It is taken for granted and recognized as conducive to "good order and military discipline." It is a military regulation like any other, and implies no disgrace. Directly a soldier's enlistment is out or directly he rises from the ranks, the prohibition is removed.—THE DELINEATOR for July.

DATES FROM FEUDAL TIMES
Rod Used in Driving Oxen Is the Original of Present System of Land Measurement.

The origin of the rod, pole or perch as a lineal and superficial measure has been traced to the rod, pole or goad used to urge and direct a team of oxen pulling a plow. So it came about it was used as a convenient and handy land measure in feudal times by the lords in allotting plots of land for agricultural purposes to the vassals and others, says a writer in the Builders' Journal.
One rod wide and 40 long (i. e., one furrow long, deep) built up a quarter of an acre. The furlong, or four poles wide and same depth—i. e., 40 poles, one acre—was a convenient length for a furrow before turning the plow. Of course these lengths somewhat varied in different parts of the country where soils and agriculture varied, but gradually the slight variations grew less and finally the present accepted statutory acre was evolved.
Gunter's chain of 66 feet (ten square chains to the acre) was invented by Rev. Edmund Gunter (1581-1626). He was a professor of astronomy at Gresham college, London, and ingeniously adapted it to facilitate decimal calculations in land measurements. The use of rod in superficial measurements of brick work and lineally in hedges, ditches and fences followed as a convenient existing measure.
